ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

Multimedia content descriptions are encoded for a specific application domain using an instance document that encodes the descriptions in a general application domain. The instance document is transformed from the general application domain to the specific application domain by mapping from a general application namespace to a specific application namespace, and a binary version is created from the transformed instance document. A frequency table derived from the specific application namespace may be used to create a more optimized binary version.